WELCOME TO DEAD CENTRAL

Our headline has nothing to do with an imagined closure of Sydney's main Railway station due to lack of trains and passengers, but rather an impressive, so-named historical display recently opened in the Level 1 Galleries at the State Library of New South Wales.

Fellowship members, from their reading of Ron Withington's book Dispatched Downunder will be well aware of the significance of 'dead' in the title. The whole area of Central Station, bounded by Elizabeth, Devonshire and Pitt Streets and Eddy Avenue, was once the site of Sydney's second official burial ground, Sandhills Cemetery, in the area known as Brickfields.

This was the main cemetery for Sydney from 1820 to 1888, consecrated by Rev Samuel Marsden at a ceremony at St Phillip's Church at 11 am on 27 January 1820.

The area encompassed was more than 11 acres and was fenced by a brick wall. The oldest section, facing Elizabeth St South was first used for all burials and then just for those under Church of England rites. Later the rest of the area was designated for other denominations.

Considering the year the cemetery opened it is understandable that it became the final resting place of many First Fleeters. In summary, records indicate that 46 First Fleeters were buried there, made up of 35 convicts (22 males and 23 females), 10 Marines and 1 seaman. There were no known children.

The cemetery finally contained more than 5000 memorial stones, ranging from humble markers to ornate monuments, erected over forty-eight years from 1820 to 1868, the year of the last burial. When it officially closed in 1888 the estimated final capacity approached 30 000 burials.

By 1900 the grounds had become neglected and it was said at the time 'a thick, disorderly, and in some places almost impenetrable scrub covered most of the ground and tombstones lay scattered in careless confusion all over the place - where standing, they presented grotesque attitudes like a party of drunken men crossing a field'.

By 1901 the NSW Government was planning to use the site for Central Railway Station. Descendants were invited to have the headstones relocated. Many, including those of 10 identified First Fleeters, went to the Bunnerong Cemetery at Matraville, with others going to Rookwood, Woronora, South Head, Gore Hill and Waverley, the Government meeting the cost of the relocation. It was announced at the time that everything had been cleared from the site of the Sandhills Cemetery which eventually was totally occupied by the Railway Station.

The Fellowship has conducted two dedication ceremonies installing plaques to honour First Fleeters buried at both Sandhills (16 October 1988) and at Bunnerong (26 June 1988).

PRESIDENT'S PEN

Jon Fearon

Your magazine this issue continues a focus that began last time, when the life of one of the marines on the First Fleet, Isaac Tarr, was featured. Two more Marines have their stories told this time, one who died here in the colony at 28, the other who stayed in the service for seventy years and died in England at the age of 90.

Another link to last time is our lead story about the former Devonshire Cemetery which became Central Station at the turn of the 20th Century. If you happen to be in Sydney don't miss the Dead Central Exhibition at the State Library, where the change from graves to trains is expertly presented.

Those of you who belong to chapters will be currently attending your AGMs and electing your executives and committees for the year ahead. It saddens me and other directors when we hear of chapters unable to find willing volunteers to hold office and keep the FFF flag flying. Remember what we say, that the life of the Fellowship is clearly seen in the chapters.

And this brings me to a related matter. Below is your invitation to attend this year's AGM, which will be held at Windsor and hosted by Hawkesbury-Nepean Chapter in October. Our Articles of Association allow for 13 directors. So far only 10 nominations have been received. Currently the Board meets at First Fleet House on the 4th Thursday morning of the month and will welcome any willing volunteers to the table, whether descendant member, associate or friend. Half the current members also serve their own chapters in an official capacity but this is not a prerequisite. It just shows how keen we are! JON relocation site at Botany occurred on 13 May 2016 when the First Fleet Memorial Garden was opened and dedicated at Eastern Suburbs Memorial Park.

The Dead Central exhibition at the library, which is open until 17 November this year, is a very modern curation, best appreciated using the free smart-phone app provided on entry. Viewers listen to the enacted commentary as they make their way around the seven sections of the display.

The first, Hidden Histories, introduces the concept and visitors are invited to visit the past and explore the maps, letters, paintings and photographs, each of which gives evidence of a story to tell.

Consecrated Ground focuses on the setting up of the cemetery in 1820. A historic map of Sydney from 1822 directs us to the site alongside a map showing aboriginal cultural sites at the time. There are accompanying art works from the period, including Taylor's 1821 panoramic view of Sydney, purposefully annotated.

In the third section, Resting Place, we read the general orders and can marvel at the miniature portraits of significant citizens buried there such as Mary Reiby and Simon Lord. The spoken guide brings them back from their graves to speak to us. Here also are the health reports from the 1860s with Legislative Assembly proceedings and also excellent photographs of the site's later years as it fell into disrepair.

The change from cemetery to station is featured in Station for a City, highlighting the long years of debate as to where to build a new station worthy of the growing city it was to serve. Most impressive are Norman Selfe's large birds-eye-view watercolours of a proposed city centre, (not Hyde Park, said the demonstrators) and the concerns expressed by many over the disappearance of old Sydney.

A large room is set aside for the fifth section, Posterity, where viewers can sit down and watch videos of underground station development juxtaposed with multiple headstones. The audio guide allows listeners to hear some voices from the headstones. In this room we can also see the Epitaph book of sketches and photographs by the heritage couple Arthur and Josephine Foster, dating from 1900 before the headstones were removed.

There are photos in Exhumation showing the dilapidated state of the cemetery and workmen removing headstones to the tram for delivery to Botany. The government gazette's extract highlights the decision to locate the station at Devonshire St as an adjunct to Belmore Park and an extension of the rail lines from Redfern.

Birth of a Station is the final section, where the focus, through photographs and newspaper cuttings, is the preparation and building in sandstone of 'the handsomest station in the world' The audio includes two minute chats with busy people and on display are the first train and a ticket issued on the day, 4 August 1906.

Footnote: Workers preparing the groundwork at Central for Sydney's new Metro recently unearthed, and archaeologists identified, the grave and remains of a draper Joseph Thompson who was buried in 1858. An advert calling for descendants found one such, Sydney Uni Professor Penny Russell, who is researching for her book about him. How's

JAMES MCMANUS (1770-1798) and JANE POOLE (1768-1826) ~ Part 1

Author: Dennis James Thomas McManus PSM BA, Dip T and C P, M.B.Env. [dennis.mcmanus3@bigpond.com]

James McManus 1770-1798 Summary

Born: Date and place unknown, about 1770. Likely to be in England or Ireland. Author would appreciate any information. Occupations: Marine Private 59th(Portsmouth) Company 1785-1791. Arrived on Charlotte. He was on Norfolk Island as a settler 1791-1792. Returned to Sydney and joined the NSW Corps on 10th May 1792 for 5 years. In 1794 promised a grant and in 1797 granted 65 acres at Mulgrave Place (now Agnes Banks) on the Hawkesbury River. This grant and other land passed to his wife when he died. Died: 15 April 1798. Registered: St Phillip's Anglican Church, Sydney. Buried: Old Sydney Burial Ground, George Street, Sydney - now the Sydney Town Hall site. Married to Jane Poole: Norfolk Island in November 1791. Children of James and Jane: Sarah (1793-1793) James (1794-1839) and John (1797-1873).

UK background

In 1786 James was in the 59th (Portsmouth) Company serving as a Marine Private on the guard ship Hector. He may have joined the Marines in 1785. Prior to that we know nothing of him. I am hoping further information will come forward. I have contacted the Royal Marines Museum and the UK National Archives without success.

James travels to Botany Bay

There is a discrepancy in the records as to which ship James travelled on. Some accounts say James arrived on the Charlotte and others the Sirius. Historian Mollie Gillen explains the discrepancy. James was in fact on both ships. He was on the Sirius but moved to the Charlotte on 19 March 1787 some eight weeks before the first fleet sailed. (Molly Gillen, Founders of Australia, Sydney, 1989, p. 233.) HMS Sirius was one of the two naval escorts for the First Fleet. The first Governor of New South Wales, Arthur Phillip, travelled on the Sirius.

When leaving, the Charlotte had 34 marine privates under the direction of Captain Watkin Tench. On the Sirius there were 43 marine privates. Prior to leaving England in early 1787 Tench was commissioned by John Debrett to write an account of the journey to the new colony. Four others were also commissioned to write accounts - Governor Arthur Phillip, Judge Advocate David Collins, (both on the Sirius), Lieutenant Governor John Hunter and Surgeon John White (on the Charlotte.)

All of these accounts and more are available as free e-books at <http://gutenberg.net.au/first-fleet.html> A word search has been made of all five First Fleet accounts. With the exception of Collins, none makes specific mention of James McManus or Jane Poole. But they provide a first-hand view of the very same small world in which both James and Jane lived even if through a different prism to Marine Private James and Convict Jane.

First account of James McManus in the colony

The first record of James in New South Wales is a sad one and there are three accounts. "26 August 1790 confined for stealing a chest containing several articles, the property of Private Charles McCarty; 4 October 1790 charged with stealing 4 shirts value twelve shillings, 5 pairs of trousers value fifteen shillings, one white Dimoty waistcoat value one shilling and six pence, one pair of shoes value three shillings, one pair of stockings value one shilling, all the property of Private Charles McCarty ..... Pleaded not guilty. Evidence was given by Private McCarty, Acting Sergeant John Curry and Private William Charlton all of the New South Wales Corps. The verdict was Not Guilty." (<http://www.gencircles.com/users/bshaw3/1/data/23>) The Australian History Research site says "The next day McManus tried to cut his own throat in the guardhouse, but was prevented by Corporal James Bagley after scaring himself in several places. James Scott, a marine sergeant who kept a journal from 1787 to 1792, records that "Since his confinement he seems insane. For eleven days he took no sort of victuals, except a few spoons of flour and water".

1791 - James decides to stay

On 21 September 1791 the Gorgon arrived in Sydney. The Gorgon was also assigned to transport officers, including Watkin Tench, and the marines back to England after 4 years in the colony (January 1788 to late 1791). Tench says of the event he "hailed it with rapture and exaltation" (Source: Tim Flannery, Watkin Tench's 1788 p.210.) But apparently this is not how James McManus and another 62 marines viewed it for they decided to stay.

Government offer of land grants

Phillip's original instructions did not provide wide allowance of land grants. However, with the arrival of the second fleet in 1790, Governor Phillip issued an invitation to non-commissioned officers and privates to take up land. At that time every private soldier was offered an allotment of 80 acres if single and 100 acres if married plus 10 acres for every child. In the same 1790 invitation a bounty of £3.0.0 was offered to every soldier who enlisted in the NSW Corps. They were given a further assurance that "in the case of a proper demeanour on their part, they shall, after a further service of five years, be entitled to double the former portion of land, provided they chose to become settlers in the country.....to be subject to .. annual quit-rent of one shilling for every 50- acres." (Source: Tim Flannery, Watkin Tench's 1788 p.129-130)

Tench says that 63 out of 160 marine privates accepted the offer to enter the New South Wales Corps and to take up grants at Norfolk Island or Rose Hill. On 5 April 1791 39 persons, sailors or marines, including James McManus, were granted 60 acres of land each at Norfolk Island. (Source: Cathy Dunn, 'Some land grants of 1791 Parramatta NSW and Norfolk Island')

1791 - James goes to Norfolk Island

Governor Phillip's Despatches for 1788-1791 show that James McManus was among 29 marines who sailed from Sydney on the Atlantic on 26 October 1791 to settle on Norfolk Island.

1792 - James joins the NSW Corps and returns to Sydney

We do not know why James chose to go to Norfolk Island. Was it simply because his land grant would be there? Was it related to the convict Jane Poole being there? Jane was sent to Norfolk Island on 11 November 1789. He probably first met Jane on the Charlotte on their journey out from England. They almost certainly knew each other before James landed at Norfolk Island because they were married within days of his arrival. We also do not know what happened to the grant offered on Norfolk Island, what he did while he was there nor why he left after a stay of less than 10 months.

In August 1792 James left Norfolk Island on board the same ship he arrived on – the Atlantic - bound for Port Jackson. On board was his wife Jane Poole and her daughter Margaret who is reported to have been born on Norfolk Island in 1789. The father of Margaret is unknown.

James joined the NSW Corps on 10 May 1792 while he was still on Norfolk Island and was discharged 10 May 1797. "The NSW Corps was formed in England in 1789 as a permanent regiment to relieve the First Fleet Marines. A fourth company was raised from those marines wishing to remain in NSW under Captain George Johnston, who had been Governor Phillip's aide-de-camp." (Wikipedia) Jane's seven year sentence expired on 19 August 1793 and we have the birth of Sarah who died in her first year in 1793 and James (1794-1839). A third child, John was born in 1797 (1797-1873).

1797 - James receives his land grant on the Hawkesbury River

On 10 May 1797 (his discharge date from the NSW Corps; exactly 5 years' service started on 10 May 1792) James was granted 65 acres in the district of Mulgrave Place on the Hawkesbury River by Governor Hunter at a rent of 5 shillings after 5 years (R J Ryan, Land Grants 1788-1809 p.84).

There is an excellent detailed book on the history of the Hawkesbury settlement by Jan Barkley-Jack - Hawkesbury Settlement Revealed, A new look at Australia's third main-land settlement 1793-1802, Rosenberg 2009. From this book we know the details of the grant to James and its later transfer to Jane.

James was one of 23 soldiers, 63 ex-convicts and 5 free settlers promised land at Mulgrave Place in 1794 by Acting Governor Grose. Barkley-Jack explains the 65 acres. James was entitled to 25 acres plus 20 for Jane his wife plus 10 for each of the children still living at that time – Sarah and James Jnr. Barkley-Jack says that James was one of two marine privates in 1794 to be promised acreage on the Hawkesbury based on a family – the other marine was John Atkins at York Reach.

1800 - Jane is given a grant of 160 acres.

The grant to ex-convict Jane Poole (McManus) registered in March 1800 was unique in the colony because of the caveat it carried. Governor Hunter had been particularly careful to ensure that no male could ever take over Jane Poole's grant. This was because Jane and her family posed a special case within the settlement. Like John Watts, a double acreage had been promised to marine private James McManus, when he enlisted as a member of the New South Corps in the colony, as it was to all such men. The army had a way of looking after its own in providing for their families even after they had died. Patronage links in 1800 had ensured Jane a 160 acre grant on behalf of her deceased husband James, to replace his smaller acreage given by Grose.

By 1800 Jane was farming in conjunction with Ridge, a transportee who arrived on the Atlantic on the Third Fleet. In 1798, two years after he had served out his sentence, Ridge had begun living on his purchased South Creek grant of William Butler. In the 1800 muster, the large McManus grant is listed as belonging to Ridge, although the governor's involvement, does result in the rare acknowledge- ment that part of Richard's property was a grant to his 'wife'."

A daughter, Martha, was born in 1803, before the couple split, but by 1806 Jane is shown with four male and two female children. By 1809 Richard Ridge was renting in the Cornwallis area from Sarah Cooley, presumably part of Argyle Farm. He has married Margaret Forrester, the daughter of Robert and Isabella, and it seems Richard and Margaret later lived downriver on Richard's 1804 Portland Head grant, Richard later being a constable and provost marshal's bailiff.

James' Death in 1798

James McManus died in 1798 cause unknown. Assuming he was born in about 1770 he died at about 28 years of age. He was buried on 15 April in the Old Sydney Burial Site in George Street which is now the site of the Sydney Town Hall. This cemetery operated from 1792 to 1820. The Burial Site Register compiled by the City of Sydney holds the names and some detail for 2,266 persons including 73 First Fleeters. James is listed as No 1340: McManus James, No age, 1798, April 15, Settler. The main source for the McManus entry is the St Phillip's Church Parish Register.

JAMES MEREDITH, CAPTAIN LIEUTENANT OF MARINES 24th (PLYMOUTH) COMPANY

Available records indicate that James Meredith was born in 1754. The 1841 census shows that in retirement in Monmouthshire he was living with his son James Henry, born 17.7.1793, an officer in the Royal Navy. James senior was not born in that county.

His military service records suggest that he himself may have come from a family similarly employed. At 22, in April 1777 he was commissioned 2nd Lieutenant of Marines in the 8th (Plymouth) Company while stationed at Halifax Nova Scotia and the following year he was promoted to 1st Lieutenant after serving on HMS Magnificent in the West Indies and Canadian waters. His promotion to Captain Lieutenant came in September 1782 after which he was Marine Captain on the Plymouth guardship, Culloden.

In 1786 he volunteered for the venture to Botany Bay and married Elizabeth Baker Harvey at East Stone House, Devon in November of that year, six months before setting sail on the Friendship, the smallest vessel of the First Fleet, on 13.05.1787. He was already at sea when his first daughter, Eliza, was baptised in the November of that year.

He was befriended by Ralph Clark during the voyage, agreeing with Clark on the use of severity towards convicts, who should be 'put in irons on the smallest fault'. Clark, despite the friendship, tended to be critical of many of his fellow officers, commenting that James had declined to meet the Spanish Governor at Teneriffe and that he was considered one of the more 'hard drinkers' among the marines.

Ralph Clark's diary is the main source of anecdotes relating to the James Meredith during his nearly four years in the Sydney Cove settlement. James Meredith seemed quite adventurous and was often 'up river' hunting with marine officer friends. Even before the fleet left Botany Bay, Meredith is recorded by several diarists as keen on fishing, how long he stayed out and with whom he was accompanied.

For Parramatta River excursions in early autumn 1788, his usual friends were Clark, Captain Tench and (surgeon) Arndell, the latter having been with him when the two of them lost their way in the bush, were out all night but not found by a search party and finally returned to the boat the next morning 'very fatigued'. On another occasion an indigenous spear man attempted to attack Meredith just after he left a short 'gift-exchange' to return to his boat. He apparently responded by firing his musket into a group of trees where his would-be assassin was hiding.

Several times during 1778-9 James Meredith was called by Arthur Phillip and David Collins for duty at the Criminal Court, while on other occasions it was Meredith himself who was wanted for various minor misdemeanours. The complainant in most cases was actually his supervisor Major Ross, who seemed to regard Captain Meredith's activities as often bordering on illegality. One time it was an accusation of stealing public garden pumpkins at Rose Hill where he and a party of marines were on duty and on another occasion, back at Sydney Town, he was accused of 'disturbing' Sarah Bellamy in her hut. The latter 'charge' was followed by a more serious incident that involved Major Ross's convict secretary, Herbert Keeling in October 1789. The angry Ross suspended Meredith as 'unfit for duty' and the matter was blown up in a court martial on his return to England where he hoped to successfully defend himself against his accusers.

St Mary's Church, Welsh Newton, Herefordshire

The action was officially confirmed by the Governor himself in April 1790 when his letter to Admiralty Secretary Philip Stephens, referred to the death of Marine Captain Shea and the suspension of Captain Meredith. With Arthur Phillip's letter was a Return of Marines that had been compiled by Captain Campbell and a list of the officers and Marines who wished to remain in the colony at the end of their tour of duty. Phillip himself made note that Captain Meredith had requested a court martial as he 'deemed his conduct to have been such as he could justify'.

Naturally enough, James Meredith's activities in relation to his work as a marine garner much more official comment than anything referring to his 'private life'. Despite his wife Elizabeth and Eliza both being 'alive and well' in Devon, Meredith lived with a common-law convict partner in Sydney, Mary Hughes (AKA Mary Johnson) from October 1789. Their son James was baptised on 9 May 1790, on the same day as another Meredith, Frederick, a sailor, had his daughter by the convict Mary Allein baptised. (continued on page 8)

The Meredith family, in its two locations during 1792 and 1793 suffered considerable sadness. James junior died first in Portsmouth in October 1792, four months into his time in England. His full sister back in Sydney, Mary, died exactly 12 months later. She too, as did her brother, had received a full baptism in St Philips church the previous year. All was not lost, however for the family's future, because on 17th July, 1793, James and Elizabeth together again, welcomed their son James Henry into the family.

James Henry's birth was registered in the parish of Old Lakenham, near Norwich, where his parents must have been domiciled at the time. It is not yet known what took them there so soon after James's return to England. Perhaps there was a family connection to the area, or even a marine service appointment.

His impressive career in the marines continued without interruptions for the rest of his life, after his requested court martial in Plymouth in September 1792 was found in his favour. His name was cleared and the charge made by Major Ross those years earlier was declared 'groundless and malicious'.

In March 1794 he was promoted to brevet Major and in December of that year he embarked on Hannibal as Major of Marines. He served on her until the end of September 1800, mainly in the West Indies. During that six year period he was promoted to Lieutenant Colonel. Hart's Army List for 1841, the year of James Meredith's death, indicates further progress through the ranks of the Royal Marines : Colonel in April 1808, Major-General in June 1811, Lieutenant General in July 1821 and General in June 1838.

His death at his residence in Monk St, Monmouth on 9th July 1841 was recorded in the Monmouthshire press 'at the patriarchal age of 88'. His wife, Elizabeth had predeceased him by seven years. Her death notice in The Merlin of 9th August 1831 reads 'Died, on Tuesday night, aged 73, Elizabeth, the wife of General Meredith of this town. The demise of this esteemed lady, which was awfully sudden, is much lamented in the circle of her acquaintance.'

NEAR THIS SPOT ARE DEPOSITED THE REMAINS OF
JAMES MEREDITH ESQ
 A GENERAL IN THE ARMY AND A COLONEL OF ROYAL MARINES
 WHO DIED AT MONMOUTH JULY 9TH 1841
 IN THE 88TH YEAR OF HIS AGE
 HAVING HELD A COMMISSION IN HIS COUNTRY'S SERVICE 70
 YEARS, 50 OF WHICH HE WAS IN ACTIVE EMPLOYMENT
 IN ALMOST EVERY PART OF THE GLOBE
 DURING THE MOST EVENTFUL PERIOD OF ITS HISTORY
 ALSO OF ELIZABETH HIS WIFE
 WHO DEPARTED THIS LIFE AUGUST 5TH 1834
 IN THE 75TH YEAR OF HER AGE
 BELOVED IN LIFE AND LAMENTED IN DEATH

The esteem shown by the local community for this couple can be gauged by the fact that they are buried in the church itself. The rolled back central aisle carpet reveals the inscribed flagstone showing their initials and dates of death.

NORFOLK ISLAND TO COMMEMORATE THE SIRIUS SINKING

[Advertisement 1 - N.I. Travel Centre] A warm invitation is extended to all Fellowship of First Fleeters members to be on Norfolk Island in March 2020 to witness events commemorating the 230th Anniversary of the wrecking of HMS Sirius. As the flagship of the First Fleet, her March 19th 1790 wrecking records her as undoubtedly the Nation's most important shipwreck.

The exciting news is that a very special week of events with special guest presenter Professor Graham Seal, author of *Great Convict Stories and Professor of Folklore at Curtin University has been organised by Norfolk Island Travel Centre. Graham will spotlight many extraordinary happenings and convicts, possibly including those who lived throughout this tumultuous event. Other presenters are history and folklore specialists Don and Sue Brian, who have uniquely collected the stories, songs and poems of convicts, whalers and others from this period; and museum staff with responsibility for the HMS Sirius collection.

Together, our presenters offer the opportunity to honour your ancestor's story, delve deeper into the writing about convict lives and stories and understanding the importance of this devastating event in the Nation's early history.

We highly recommend taking out the Optional 230th Anniversary Package that includes:

- Welcome dinner and presentation
- Four workshop presentations by Graham, Don and Sue and museum personnel
- 19th March special waterfront event under opposite the wreck site at Kingston, including a sumptuous luncheon, presentations and entertainment

BOOK REVIEW ~ ESTHER by JESSICA NORTH

With so many well-known histories of the first settlement years, particularly those written by family historians, it is surprising that only two books in the Family History section of the Fellowship library are about First Fleeters George Johnston and Esther Abrahams. So this new book by Sydney author, Jessica North, published by Allen and Unwin in 2019, particularly as it relates to Esther, is a welcome addition.

The author's thorough research over a ten year period has uncovered many interesting aspects of Esther's life and times and the attention to detail is readily discernible throughout the book. The select bibliography lists over 90 titles and the book is well indexed.

Instead of numbered endnotes or footnotes, Jessica has appended each of the thirteen chapters with a short account of the chief texts used to create the incidents that form the story line. This is a helpful approach where novelistic anecdotes have been included to flow the story along. As indicated this is a true story and the task in family history is always to make the story readable and the characters engaging. The author has partially achieved the latter with creative additions of her own. They work well because of the Chapter Notes, where specific sources are cited and the imagined segments acknowledged.

There is no doubt, however, that this is a family history rather than a novel where we would find characterisation further developed. As such, relations between Esther and George are not really taken to any depth. Some themes are developed, such as Esther's interplay with her indigenous friends and their families and her need to be accepted by the local emancipist citizenry.

A clever device used by the author is to link Esther's long-time friendship with the Henry Kable and William Bryant families and the more well-known incidents involving these fellow convicts are carefully interwoven into the storyline. The heroine's life is well set into the chronology of the times and the dated historical snippets make for easy reading. As such, the well-attested Irish uprising at Castle Hill and the arrest of William Bligh leading to Esther's becoming First Lady are obvious inclusions because of the Johnston's significant involvement in both incidents. Esther's Jewishness is underplayed.

In summary, it is an enjoyable book to read, with a textual style which engages the reader. Its 16 pages of colour prints on glossy paper are a worthy inclusion, particularly as some of the scenes chosen are not usually included in the literature covering the history of the period. WJF

AN HEIRLOOMS REGISTER

An excellent idea for chapters & family groups:

#7787 Malcolm Tompson, President of Mid North Coast Chapter, writes:

I have added an heirlooms register to our chapter website. Go to www.fffmidnorthcoast.com.au and find the link on the Home page. This follows the list of First Fleeters started some months ago.

I have inherited several relics of the Boggis/Tompson family over the years and have wondered about others scattered through the family. While I possess these things, I feel I am only a caretaker and have a responsibility to make them available for others to see. So I have started the register and will encourage other family members to display their heirlooms on it. There is a sad case where a family member died who had possessed a family bible. She had only step-children who were not interested, so the bible has disappeared. Had it been on the register, there would have been some hope of retaining it.

The register is designed for first fleeters only and users must nominate their first fleeter ancestor to enter/display an item. Photos are desirable.

As an example, you can see the heirlooms for my first fleeter by entering "William" and "Boggis".

The Register entry lists : Item, Ancestor, Inheritor, Email, Location, Description and Image.

This is a letter seal owned by Charles Tompson, inherited by Malcolm Tompson, whose email is provided and location stated. It is described as 'A gilt seal with the Tompson coat of arms and the initials CTDV ie Charles Tompson Deus Vult (God Willing)'.

CHAPTER OUTING TO FIRST FLEET HOUSE

A glance at Page 11 each issue will indicate the great variety of programmes our chapters across the country have developed. Outings, from bi-monthly to occasionally, feature in most of them.

Botany Bay Chapter has opted for the alternate plan and on the 11 June a group chose to visit First Fleet House for their very first outing. Directors 'on duty' were pleased to welcome them all and show them the building, explain its origin and genesis as the FFF 'headquarters' in 1988 and answer a multiplicity of questions.

As well as a hearty morning tea the highlight definitely seemed to be the Sirius Room with its Borrowdale Library. It was good that prospective members David Payne and Christine Williamson found many of the books a great help for their research.

Earlier members in the group also found many of the new acquisitions most helpful in their own understanding of the lives of their FF ancestors. It was good, too, to welcome Glen and Margarita Farley (FF Andrew Fishburn) visiting NSW from Swan River Chapter
